- The image displays two views of a 4-way ball valve. The left view is a side profile showing a red handle on top of a black body, with two threaded ports at the bottom. The right view is a top-down perspective of the valve's internal structure, showing four ports arranged in a cross pattern, each with a silver-colored hexagonal nut and a yellow O-ring. The central black body has a red handle on top and bottom.

Three hand-operated valves are shown side-by-side. Each valve has a black, multi-ported body with a central handwheel. The handwheels are colored red, yellow, and black from left to right. Each handwheel features a central slot for a handle and a small circular logo at the bottom. The valves are mounted on a common base.
